FOREWORD

The first newspaper published in Alberta was the Edmonton Bulletin which appeared in 1880, a quarter of a century before the establishment of the Province. It was followed by the Fort Macleod Gazette in 1882 and the Calgary Herald in 1883. Before 1982, some one thousand and ninety identified papers were published in a sparsely populated territory. Another twenty-three titles may also have been published and are listed in the Fugitive Titles section of the Directory.

Although the Canadian Pacific Railway arrived in Calgary in 1883, settlement was slow to develop, while many communities were isolated from the railways. As new settlements were established, newspapers appeared to supply information ranging from exclusively local to national and international news. The quality and content of these papers depended on the publisher, often a jobbing-printer in smaller centres. However, there were more sophisticated and experienced newspaper men, including the legendary R.C. (Eye-Opener Bob) Edwards.

A useful feature of the Directory is the Biographical Index which identifies individuals involved in the newspapers, with notes on their activities in Alberta and elsewhere. Other indexes provide a chronological review of the papers, subject access and titles, including bi-lingual and alternative titles.

My own Bibliography of the Prairie Provinces and Professor Strathern's Alberta, 1954-1979 have documented monographic publications. However, until now, there has been no guide to the newspaper press which had a significant influence on public opinion and settlement patterns. It is very gratifying to see the documentation of Alberta history has been extended by this new study. Not only does it fill an important gap in the historical record but it should encourage the preservation of these fragile and irreplaceable archives.

The Directory is organized under place of publication with titles arranged in chronological order, so that an historical perspective is provided. Many papers had complicated histories, involving changes of title and ownership, relocations, amalgamations, splits, and relationships to other papers. All these developments are documented in the Notes Sections of title entries, while, as already noted, the extensive indexes provide alternative access to the papers.

Only those who have laboured on bibliographical work which requires the exploration of new areas of investigation can truly appreciate the time and effort involved in such an undertaking. Professor Strathern has made a signal contribution to the history of the printed word in the province and provided a key to further studies, not only of the press, but to other aspects of Alberta's history.

Introduction

INTRODUCTION

It is almost impossible to properly estimate the far-reaching power and influence of the press in this Western country where there are fewer social attractions than in more thickly populated countries to direct the attentions of a farmer from the chief recreation of rural life, namely, reading, and where the local paper is probably more widely and carefully read than anywhere else in Canada. (Deputy Commissioner Peterson, Department of Agriculture, N.W.T., Publisher and Printer, v9no8 Ag, 1902, p.11).

Events, opinions, the temper of the times — all these are reflected more completely in the pages of newspapers than in any other single source of information. For this reason old files are being used more and more not only by historians, but by research workers in a wide variety of subject fields. Journalists, script writers, economists, psychologists, sociologists, biologists, and others are all finding, sometimes to their great surprise, that data essential to them are frequently hidden away in old newspapers. Unless the more important files are preserved, a great deal of interest and significance in Canada's past will be lost to us. (W. Kaye Lamb, Introduction to Canadian Newspapers on microfilm catalogue. Ottawa: Canadian Library Association, 1954, p.1)

The values of newspapers to the reader of the day and to the researcher of today are identified in these two quotations. In 1982, when work on this Directory began, information about Alberta newspapers existed in Checklists of the holdings of Institutions, Directories and Union Lists. These sources, published and unpublished, differed in their definitions of the term "newspaper;" consequently, inclusions or exclusions varied and no listing was comprehensive. Fewer than half the titles now identified were recorded and information about publishing history was not included.

This Directory lists and describes all identified newspapers published in Alberta between 1880 and 1982. Newspapers issued for the first time subsequent to December 31, 1982, are not included. Information regarding newspapers continuing after that date is as complete as possible up to the end of 1982. Changes that occurred after that date are noted only when supplied by informants.

Publications eligible for inclusion were determined after an acceptable definition of the term "newspaper" was established. An extensive literature search confirmed Jean Whiffen's observation:

There is no internationally accepted definition of a newspaper, but this kind of serial is usually printed originally on newsprint, in a format of not less than four columns of type per page, is issued at least once a month, without a cover, and has a masthead. It usually contains general news coverage, rather than being oriented towards specific subject matter, but certain special types such as financial, student, ethnic, etc. are common to many countries. (Union Catalogues of Serials, Serials Librarian v8no1, Fall, 1983, p.73).

Not all newspapers published in Alberta meet these criteria: some were published less frequently than once a month, a few were handwritten in a single copy, while others had no masthead, though all had a banner title on the first page.

Papers included in this Directory are those considered by their publishers to be newspapers or so identified by examination or through secondary sources. Papers excluded are: church bulletins; community league organs; election campaign papers; papers published by and for juveniles, including college and school organs; bulletins and newsletters of companies, organizations and professional and trade associations; shoppers that comprise 75% or more advertising content and are not eligible for second class mail as defined by the Canada Postal Guide; and tourist papers comprised solely of advertising and information about tourist attractions. It was not always possible to establish that a publication met the definition of a newspaper, while occasionally only the discovery of a specimen issue late in the research revealed the nature of the item. In marginal cases, arbitrary decisions for inclusion were made on the basis of content, format and research value.

The first task in compiling the Directory was to establish a basic working file of titles from Checklists, Directories, Union Lists and Newspaper Indexes. The search was then widened by an extensive examination of secondary sources such as local histories, biographies and studies of the Canadian Press. The resultant file was then arranged by geographic areas and these areas clustered into counties, improvement districts, towns and cities. This approach revealed connections between papers published in a particular place and those published in neighboring areas. It was a common practice for a publisher to issue newspapers for a number of centres from one locality or to move a press from one place to another as economic conditions fluctuated. Additionally, a publisher might absorb, merge or split two or more papers for economic reasons.

The files of newspapers held in some twenty-one institutions were examined. Photocopies of titles held elsewhere in Canada were obtained wherever possible and an extensive correspondence was conducted with archivists, librarians, publishers and editors, including a questionnaire mailed to over three hundred informants. Many papers were either not located in any institution or were represented by minimal holdings. Moreover, secondary sources proved to be contradictory or unreliable, as errors were copied from one source to another without attribution, while other errors occurred owing to the faulty memories of elderly informants on long past events. Collating these contradictory references involved some bibliographic detective work and further delving into new sources. A list of titles found in one secondary source, with no confirmatory reference or surviving copies, was established. Further investigation pruned this list substantially as garbled references were untangled. The remaining doubtful titles may have been periodicals or publications projected but not realized. To assist further research, these titles are provided in a short list entitled Fugitive Titles.

Unfortunately for the historical record, unlike some other provinces, such as neighboring Saskatchewan, Alberta had no legislation requiring newspaper publishers to provide annual returns from proprietors, publishers and editors. An extensive search of the Corporate Registry of the Alberta

Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs revealed little information about newspapers published by registered companies.

As work progressed, a Biographical Index of editors and publishers was established. This information revealed new titles and clarified others, so that the working file was revised. This Index is also intended to serve as a source for researchers interested in the origins of those who affected public opinion through the press and their overall contributions to newspaper publishing in Alberta and elsewhere. Regrettably, this record is very uneven. Although information was gathered from a wide variety of sources, in some cases, almost nothing could be discovered but a starting point for further exploration now exists.

Two factors influencing the nature of Alberta newspapers should be noted for the benefit of future researchers. The first is the extensive use of ready-print or boiler-plate printed elsewhere, usually in Winnipeg, by such firms as the Western Ready Print Service of the Winnipeg Saturday Post Limited or the Toronto Type Foundry Company, later purchased by the Prairie Publishers Co-operative Ltd. in Regina. These ready-print sections comprised the inner pages, usually six or eight, of a paper and contained serialized melodramatic stories, syndicated health columns, advertisements and world-wide gossip. These sections were sent by rail. Consequently, the expansion of the railways and the vagaries of railway services affected local publishing significantly.

The second factor was the practice of contract newspapers, whereby such papers printed records of minutes prepared and supplied by a local government such as a County Council in return for the publishers' guaranteed blanket circulation to ratepayers and sometimes reduced or free advertising rates for that government. The first such paper was the Strathmore Standard published in 1912. Alberta is the only province in Canada which includes provision in its legislation for contract papers.

Although every effort has been made to make the Directory complete within its stated limitations, it is almost inevitable in a work of this nature that some titles have not been identified or that the information obtained from secondary sources is incorrect or incomplete. While I owe much to all those who have contributed to the record, the responsibility for errors and omissions is, of course, mine. It is my earnest wish that such limitations will be corrected by those aware of additional information and that the Directory will stimulate further attention to Alberta newspapers, including efforts to preserve surviving issues of these indispensable historical documents.

A work of this nature can only be achieved with generous assistance from many sources. It is hoped that none of these have been overlooked, though it is impossible to list all individuals and institutions who patiently answered numerous enquiries over seven years of investigation. I am particularly grateful to Mr. B.B. Peel who kindly agreed to write the Foreword, to Mrs. Priscilla Rushton who undertook a major task in compiling the basic check-list of titles and much of the preparation of the master file of newspaper entries, to Miss Charlotte Landry who compiled the master file of titles in languages other than English, and to Miss Anna Bombak who documented Ukrainian newspapers. In addition, recognition must be given to those institutions who provided courteous assistance over periods of lengthy examination of their files, especially the Alberta Legislature Library, the Provincial Archives of Alberta and the Glenbow Archives and Library. I am also indebted to Miss Noeline Bridge who edited the Biographical Index, in itself a major task, and to Mr. David Kales who undertook the final check of holdings in the Alberta Legislature Library.

For financial assistance, I am grateful to the University of Alberta's Small Faculties Endowment Fund for the Advancement of Scholarship and The Western Canada Publications Project of that University which funded the Pilot Project on a test file of newspapers to develop the methodology for the Directory. Most especially, I thank Alberta Culture and The Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council of Canada's Strategic Grants Division, who funded the study so generously. Finally I acknowledge my indebtedness to the University of Alberta which granted me a study leave for the academic year 1986/87 to complete the project and to my publishers, the University of Alberta Press.

Arrangement

Newspapers are arranged chronologically by first date of issue under the name of the geographic area or place that they principally served. The geographic areas are arranged alphabetically, and where necessary, cross references are provided from earlier or related place names. If the place of printing or publication differed from the area served this information is provided in the Notes Section of the entry.

Descriptive Elements of Entries

Each newspaper title entry consists of a number of elements in order of appearance as follows (see sample entries):

A. Item Number Each newspaper has a unique item number, e.g. 352 West-Land. Ja 2, 1908-5 1913// If the same paper was published under a number of titles, all such titles have been identified by subordinate numbers, e.g. 353.1 Alberta Homestead, Ja 8? 1908-Ap 19, 1911/... 353.2 Homestead Ap 26, 1911-N 28, 1913//?

These item numbers are used to cross reference newspapers and to locate variant titles in the Title Index.

B. Title

Titles were taken from the front-page banner. Where a masthead title differed from the banner title, this information is included in the Notes. All titles under which a newspaper was published are included in the Title Index, while title variations are recorded in the Notes. Bi-lingual banner titles are indicated as follows: Kanadiiskaia Niva / Canadian Field and both titles are included in the Title Index. Subtitles are also included in the Notes.

C. Publication dates

Whenever possible, full dates (day, month, year) are supplied for the first and last issues of a newspaper.

D. Frequency

The frequency element records how often a newspaper was published. This may vary over the period of publication. (See Abbreviations Used).

E. Special Interest or Ethnic Group Affiliations

This element is provided when a newspaper had a special audience, e.g. agriculture, business or labour, was directed towards a specific ethnic group or has a specific political affiliation. The political affiliation of an editor or publisher was noted when it appeared in an editorial policy statement of the newspaper or in a reference source. A Subject Index for Special Interest papers and an Ethnic Index are provided.

F. Language

A newspaper was published in the English language unless otherwise stated. In the case of bi-lingual titles, the language stated first was the predominant one. If one of the languages was used infrequently, this information is enclosed in parentheses. Any variations or additional information regarding the languages of a newspaper is provided in the Notes

G. Notes

The Notes provide information on the publishing history of a newspaper, including any explanation of irregularities and discrepancies and any additional sources of information obtained. This information is arranged in the following order and may include statements on all or some of the following:

1. Relationships between the paper and other titles such as continuations, supersessions, amalgamations and mergers, absorptions and splits.
2. Publication variations: title, frequency, suspensions, volumning and numbering, format and place of publication.
3. Publishing history: The names of publishers, editors, contributors, and affiliations with organizations and associations.
4. Special features: Supplements, Sections, Special and Anniversary Issues.
5. References

Information given in the Notes may be established or confirmed in a secondary source. In such cases, a source reference is provided, e.g. Ref: CAN 1912. Citations for source references are listed in the Bibliography.

Special features

Supplements: These are considered to be an additional but separate part of a newspaper and may or may not be published by the newspaper with which it was distributed. If a supplement had separate volumning and numbering from the parent newspaper, it is described as a separate item and cross references are provided. Inclusive dates, whenever available, are provided for supplements.

Sections: These are usually integral parts of a newspaper (without separate volumning and numbering) which may serve a special interest group or a different geographic area from the parent newspaper. Cross references are made from the geographic areas served and inclusive dates, whenever available, are provided.

Special and Anniversary Issues: These are noted with dates of publication.

Relationships between newspapers

Absorptions: One newspaper was taken over by another as a result of the financial collapse of one, or simply the bringing together of subscription lists in order to serve a wider geographic area. Absorptions may have resulted in a title change or a voluming and numbering change. Whenever possible, full dates for absorptions are supplied.

Amalgamations and mergers: Two or more newspapers were consolidated to form one newspaper, usually a new one. Such an occurrence may have resulted in a title change or a voluming and numbering change. Whenever possible, full dates for amalgamations and mergers are supplied.

Continued/continued by: This relationship indicates an unbroken association between uniquely itemized newspapers, although changes may have occurred in title, place of publication, or geographic area served. The voluming and numbering is continuous between the linked newspapers.

Splits: One newspaper split to become two or more newspapers. Such an occurrence usually resulted in the creation of new titles and new voluming and numbering. Whenever possible, full dates for such splits are provided.

Superseded/superseded by: This relationship indicates that one newspaper ceased publication and was replaced by another, although an association remained between the newspapers either by sharing the same title or by having the same owner and publisher. The new newspaper started publication with a new voluming and numbering series.

Holdings

The holdings element notes those institutions possessing copies of the newspaper, the extent of their holdings and the physical format of those files. Where holdings are in an archival file with an accession number, this number is noted. Where no copies of a newspaper could be located in any institution, the entry records "No issues located."

An entry showing a continuous series of files for a newspaper does not necessarily mean that the repository possesses every single issue for the stated period. When the holdings of an institution are sparse over a particular time period, the inclusive dates are placed in square brackets, e.g. [1950-1962].

Institutions are cited by the code assigned in Symbols of Canadian Libraries. (Ottawa: National Library of Canada.) Institutions not included in that list have been coded to be consistent with it. A List of Locations with Symbols used is provided.

Finally, it should be noted that the Directory is not a Union List of institutional holdings. Only significant or unique holdings have been recorded.

BOWNESS

Formerly a town, now a suburb of Calgary. Prior to 1942, the community was called Critchley, then it took the name of Bowness and was incorporated as a village in 1948. Four years later it became a town, but lost its identity in the mid-1960s when it was incorporated into the city of Calgary. (Ref.: Mardon, E.G. Community Names of Alberta. Lethbridge: University of Lethbridge, 1973 p.39).
